Over the next week or so, I'll be profiling a number of New York City hotels suitable for business travelers. There's a lot to consider when coming to New York City for a business trip, and I can't cover it all here, but I will highlight some of the accommodation options and savings opportunities for business travelers.

For example, if you don't want to save money by staying outside of the city and commuting in, one good mid-town option is the Carlton Hotel on 88 Madison Avenue. The Carlton Hotel is a solid bet for business travelers looking for a large (317 rooms), mid-town hotel in New York City.

The modern, but classical-flavored furnishings are definitely upscale and service is strong. The hotel's Country restaurant (located in the lobby) gets good reviews and is stylish but comfortable. You can see pictures of the hotel here, or check prices for it on Kayak.com.
